The affair was a garden party combining many features of a somewhat novel nature. The beautiful grounds afforded ample opportunity for "staging" the various productions under the most delightful conditions.

A group of 30 children, coached for their part in the day's proceedings by a committee headed by Mrs. F. O. Armington and including Mrs. F. P. Todd, Misses Laura Jacobs, Vivian Burroughs and Corinne Paine, charmingly presented a series of folk dances. Gay clad gypsies (for the day only) told interesting tales and forecasted entrancing futures for those who visited their camp and produced the necessary coins to cross their palms. ited their camp and produced the necessary coins to cross their palms. Ladles of mystery, silent as the sleeping night, but not by any means somnolent, dispensed mysterious packages from their station on the banks of the River of Doubt. From the depths of a lemonade well (no drilling for other strikes of the cooling drink allowed) demure maidens served the delictous beverage and in their "candy kitchen" other young women were kept busy supplying the demands made upon them for the confections they were serving.

The plentiful provision of many

The plentiful provision of many tempting things did not prevent the supper from being well patronized, supper from being well patronized, however, for as evening came on the attendance was increased by those who had been unable to be present during the afternoon. Bright lights and new attractions served to make the evening's part of the program very attractive. Dancing on the lawn was the order from 3 to 11. The garden party was not only the financial success it deserved to be, but a social triumph as well.

The old red shed and storehouse which stood by the roadside on the McNicol property has been torn down. This house was first built by old Squire Partridge 70 years ago down at the foot of the hill nearly opposite the Dyer property. About 50 years ago Douglas Tracy, who then owned the farm, cut the top-story off from the lower part and laid a track of timbers to the place where it stood hately. Great was the day of the moving. Notice was sent out to all the farmers in this section. They came each with a yoke of oxen. Many in town remember the sight. There were no less than 30 yoke of oxen hitched to the building, each with its driver. Then at a given word, and with much Haw, Bright! and Gee, Bucking! the building moved and never once stopped until it reached its destination.
